

TEATR NARODOWY

ZAŁOŻONY W ROKU 1765

The National Theatre, located at Pl. Teatralny 3, Warsaw 00-077, in accordance with its obligations under Article 173 of the Telecommunications Law of 16 July 2004 (Journal of Laws No. 171, item 1800, as amended), hereby provides the information below on the use of cookies by the National Theatre.

The National Theatre uses cookies on its narodowy.pl website (hereinafter the "Website").

The legal basis for processing personal data in connection with the use of necessary cookies is due to the necessity to process data for the performance of a contract (Article 6, paragraph 1, letter (b) of the GDPR).

The legal basis for processing personal data in connection with the use of functional, analytical, and marketing cookies is due to the legitimate interest of the Controller (Article 6, paragraph 1, letter (f) of the GDPR), which consists in ensuring the highest quality of the services provided. The processing of personal data in connection with the use of functional and analytical cookies is dependent on obtaining the User's consent to the use of functional and analytical cookies, said consent being expressed through the configuration of the web browser used by the User.

Cookies are information files that are stored on the device of a User visiting/using a given website, including the website operated by the National Theatre. Cookies are saved on the User's device by the web browser when the User first accesses the website. By storing cookies on the User's device, each time the User connects to a given website, the website can determine that the User has previously used the website and can tailor its content to the User.

The National Theatre uses cookies for the following purposes:

- a) to adapt the content of the website's pages to the User's preferences and to optimise the use of the website; in particular, these files allow the website to recognise the device of the User and properly display the website, tailored to their individual needs.
- b) to create statistics that help understand how Users use the website, which allows for the improvement of its structure and content.
- c) to maintain the User's session (after logging in), which allows the User, for example, to avoid having to re-enter their login and password on each subpage.

The National Theatre hereby declares that cookies used by the Website do not allow for the identification and storage of User's personal data.

The National Theatre also would like to state that using its Website without changing cookie settings constitutes consent to the storage of these files in the memory of the device used by the User to access the Website. Each time the User reconnects to the Website using a device used to access the National Theatre Website, they will be able to access previously saved cookies.

Each User has the option of changing the way cookies are used that originate from, or are used by, the National Theatre. It is also possible to delete or block such cookies.

To change the way cookies are used, or to block or delete them, please make the appropriate changes in your web browser settings. Detailed information on how cookies are handled should be available in the settings of individual web browsers.

The National Theatre uses the following cookies on its website:

- a) "essential" cookies, enabling the full use of the services available on the website.
- b) cookies used to ensure security, e.g. to detect authentication abuses on the website.
- c) cookies that enable the collection of information about how the website's pages are used, e.g. how much time is spent on a specific subpage or the number of visits.
- d) "functional" cookies, enabling the "remembering" of settings selected by the User and the personalisation of the User interface, e.g. in terms of the selected language or the User's region, font size, website appearance, etc.
- e) Google Analytics cookies are cookies used by Google to analyse how the website is used by the User, to create statistics and reports on website performance. Google Analytics uses information such as: information about the operating system and web browser used by the User, the subpages viewed within the website, the time spent browsing the website and its subpages, transitions between subpages, and the source from which the User accessed the website. Users' personal data may be transferred outside the EEA due to Google Ireland Limited entrusting data to Google Limited Liability Company on servers located, among other places, in the USA. The basis for the transfer of personal data to the USA is the "EU-US Data Protection Framework." You have the option to opt out of the transfer of your data for analytical and statistical purposes using Google Analytics. To do this, install the browser add-on according to the instructions provided at <https://tools.google.com/dlpage/gaoptout>. Detailed information regarding Google Ireland Limited's use of data from application websites is available at google.com/policies/privacy/partners/.